At the height of the pandemic, the United Nations recruited “digital first responders” to push the establishment COVID narrative on social media.

The revelation actually slipped out in October 2020 during a podcast called ‘Seeking a cure for the infodemic’, although it was later shared on Twitter today.

Comments In the podcast, Melissa Fleming, head of global communications at the United Nations, explains how the COVID pandemic and lockdown created a “communications crisis” in addition to a public health emergency.

Fleming acknowledged that in order to fight so-called “misinformation” during the pandemic, the UN tapped up 110,000 people to amplify the message on social media.

“So far, we’ve recruited 110,000 information volunteers, many of whom are information volunteers with the kind of knowledge about how misinformation spreads and ask them to serve as kind of ‘digital first-responder’ in areas where misinformation travels,” Fleming stated.

That was nearly 2 years ago. It is not known how many 'digital first responders' have been recruited up to this point.

Similar efforts to create astroturf campaigns to push a story that is often new, but when entities such as oil companies engage in such efforts, they are rigging the discussion.

However, when globalist technocrats at the UN or the WEF engage in such efforts, they are rigging the discussion.

Last year, it was revealed that the British government used such tactics to scare the public into mass compliance during the pandemic, according to a behavioral scientist who worked inside the UK government.

Scientists in the UK working as advisors for the government later conceded to be “unethical” and “totalitarian” methods to control the population in order to control behavior during the pandemic.

As we previously highlighted, the World Economic Forum is planning a merger of human and artificial intelligence systems to control the flow of “misinformation” online before it is even allowed to be published.

In what some dubbed “preemptive censorship,” the WEF would block posts from appearing if they fail the censorship criteria.

Of course, the WEF, which is infamous for blocking its c
